

"To find someone who has the same core values that you have and that has great character is really what attracted me to him," she says. "He gets up every morning and first takes care of his dad, making sure all of his needs are met. Then he takes care of the animals, and then he goes to work. When he comes home, he does all the chores. He's really a nice man."

They are both building a future based on strong values and love. Their plans include building a strong relationship, building a strong Texas Longhorn breeding program, and attending every Longhorn World Championship – after all, that is where they met.

The couple divides their time between Tuttle and Guthrie until Jo Eda's youngest daughter graduates high school. Jo Eda also stays busy with her work at Service Corporation International, a company dedicated to helping facilitate gatherings for funeral services. The work has been enjoyable for Jo Eda, since she gets to help people during a time of need.

"Life is a lot of matter of fact, so I try to spend my time thinking of what I can do for someone who needs it," Jo Eda says.

This type of selfless nature can be witnessed in both Jim and Jo Eda. Jim has been the primary caregiver to his dad, and Jo Eda says that is part of what showed her that Jim has great morals and values.
